Torrance Councilman Says Plan For Rapid Transit Needs Study

Torrance Councilman —3/30, tee of the Southern California Rapid Transit District and a candidate for the 32nd Senatorial District Democratic nomination.

Although the need for rapid transit continues to mount at a quickening pace, taxpayers of Southwest Los Angeles County must not be "hurried" into financing a system from which they could never hope to benefit.

This warning came today from Torrance Councilman David K. Lyman, a member of the city selection committee of the Southern California Rapid Transit District and a candidate for the 32nd Senatorial District Democratic nomination.

"If the people of Southwest Los Angeles County are going to help pay for a rapid transit system," Lyman said, "they must first be assured that the system will serve them. Some proposals," said Lyman, "would be financed by taxpayers throughout the county, but would serve only a small number of commuters in an isolated area. Such a system has been suggested along Wilshire Boulevard," he said.

Although Lyman called for caution on the part of taxpayers in approving installation of a transit system, he said he would not oppose a tax-financed study to determine how a system effectively could help solve the problems of three million commuters from one end of the county to the other.

Even then, however, the residents of Southwest Los Angeles County should first have some assurance that their money collected in some form of tax other than property tax, would reap benefit to their portion of the county, he said.
